the discharge check valve; thus lubricant is drawn into the piston cavity
(col. 1, lines 36-40)

Thus, Stampers does not disclose an injection piston operable as an inlet check valve.

Amended claim 82 recites an O-ring present in the injection chamber, and so is patentable for the reasons discussed above in claim 7.

Respecting claim 100, Applicants note that the claimed invention recites injecting bone cement into a vertebral body from a device having both a reservoir and an injection chamber. None of the cited references discloses injecting bone cement into a vertebral body. Therefore, the cited references can not be combined to produce the claimed invention. Moreover, none of the prior art devices used in vertebroplasty comprised both reservoirs and injection chambers. Rather, these vertebroplasty devices were single barrel devices that could not provide the small, discrete injections desirable for controlling injection volume in vertebroplasty procedures.

In addition, Applicants respectfully request that Applicants be provided with a two month extensions of time for response, and charge any fees which may be due to Deposit Account No. 10-0750, but do not include any payment of issue fees.

Should there be any remaining or further questions, the Examiner is requested to place contact the undersigned directly.

Respectfully submitted,
